Key Knowledge
	Most Hindus don't think of Brahman as a being (like the Christian God) who is separate from Creation – Brahman is in every single living thing. The universe was not created by Brahman, it actually is Brahman. A way of understanding this is to think of Brahman as the energy within the universe.
	Many Hindus believe that there are different duties (dharma) that should be performed at each stage of their life (the ashramas). Living according to dharma brings good karma.
	Most Hindus believe that the atman within each living thing is trying to find its way back to Brahman. They try to live well so that in each new rebirth they grow closer to achieving this.
	Gandhi, a famous Hindu, was a lawyer in India who protested against British rule – he wanted India to rule itself. He followed the principle of ahimsa (non-violence), promoting peaceful protest. His wisdom and teachings are often quoted.
